Past performance should not be seen as a guide to future returns. The value of investments and the income from them can go down as well as up and investors may not recover the amount of their original investment.

Asset Allocation Changes and Market Commentary - no changes in April. Recently, the JP Morgan CEO, Jamie Dimon predicted a rise in US Treasury yields from 3% to 4%. I regard this as “round number bias” - the human tendency to pay special attention to “round” numbers. The July 2005 Accounting Review found that analysts who round their forecasts “are less informed, exert less effort, and have fewer resources”. Despite such bearishness, if one looks at the US 10-year yield (blue line) vs inflation expectations (red line), the US Treasuries real yield (lower graph) is higher than it has been in the last few years:

Two assets in which we are invested, US$ emerging market bonds and US$ Corporate Bonds, appear undervalued after their recent falls. US$ Emerging Market Bonds, now offer yields of c. 5.7% pa. The graph below shows a leading ETF performance vs money flows and indicates investors tend to invest after outperformance and sell after underperformance:

Meanwhile, compared to UK or European corporate bonds, US corporate bonds offer significantly higher yields across maturities on similar risk – we use currency hedged ETFs in this area to gain the extra return without any extra currency risk:

The value of investments can go down in value as well as up, so you could get back less than you invest. Exchange rates may cause the value of overseas investments and income from them to rise and fall. It is therefore important that you understand the past performance is not a guide to future returns.
